

Drukair signs its first global distribution agreement with Amadeus, opening the gateway to Bhutan

This global distribution deal will give Amadeus travel sellers easier access to flights to the Himalayas.

The Royal Bhutan Airline, operating as Drukair, is making it easier for travel sellers to book flights to the Himalayas thanks to a new global distribution agreement with Amadeus.

Headquartered at Paro International Airport in the Kingdom of Bhutan, Drukair operates flights to key cities across Asia, including Bangkok, Delhi, Kathmandu, Singapore, Dhaka, Kolkata, Guwahati, and Bagdogra. Through this collaboration, Drukair's fares, schedules, and inventory will be accessible to travel agents and partners worldwide through the Amadeus Travel Platform.

"As we strive to increase Bhutan's international accessibility, this agreement with Amadeus represents a critical turning point for Drukair. We are excited to reach more tourists looking to experience the peace, beauty, and spiritual depth that our nation has to offer by showcasing our distinctive routes and services to a worldwide audience. We look forward to working closely with Amadeus to grow our business and achieve new milestones for the Kingdom of Bhutan," says Drukair spokesperson.

"Amadeus is proud to be Drukair's first distribution partner as it seeks to expand its global reach. We strive to offer our network of travel sellers comprehensive travel content, and Bhutan is an exceptional destination that more people will now be able to reach. Asia Pacific continues to be a growth engine for the global travel industry and this agreement will further power its progress," says Javier Laforgue, Executive Vice President, Travel Unit & Managing Director, Asia Pacific, Amadeus.

The Kingdom of Bhutan has only been open to international visitors for the last 50 years, and this new agreement will make it easier than ever for those looking for adventure or spirituality to explore one of the 'world's happiest countries.'
